The Ruler of Heaven. "In the Vedas, Indra appears as the deity of the sphere of space, the dispenser of rain who dwells in the clouds. Fearsome as the ruler of the storm, the thrower of the thunderbolt, he is also the cause of fertility. As the ruler of the sky world he is the companion of Vayu, the wind, which is the life breath of the cosmos. In several hymns of the Rg Veda the highest divine functions and attributes are ascribed to him. In the triad of gods, Agni, Vayu, and Surya, who hold preeminence above the others, Indra frequently takes the place of Vayu as the ruler of the sphere of space. Agni, Indra, and Surya then represent the three forms of fire: the fire of the earthly world, the thunderbolt or fire of the sphere of space, and the sun, the fire of the sky. As the king of the gods, Indra is a prominent deity. In the Vedas, more hymns are addressed to Indra than to any other deity" (Daniélou, 106-107).

Fire. "The earth is the dwelling place of fire. Fire captured and tamed by man has been the greatest assistant in his progress, the instrument of his power. Every form of fire is worshiped as a deity, but the divinity of fire is more directly experienced in the ritual fire, born of two pieces of wood rubbed together to the accompaniment of ritual utterances and ceremonies. Agni is one of the most important deities of the Vedas. He is the mediator between men and gods, the protector of men and their homes, the witness of their actions, invoked on all solemn occasions. He presides over all sacraments, all the great events of life" (Daniélou, 87-88).

The Sun. "The Sun (Surya) is one of the three chief deities of the Vedas. It is envisaged under two aspects. As one of the spheres, one of the Vasus, the physical sun is the celestial form of fire, of Agni. As the source of light, of warmth, of life, of knowledge, the solar energy is the source of all life, represented in the twelve sons-of-the-Primordial-Vastness (Ādityas), the twelve sovereign principles. The sun is at the center of creation, at the center of the spheres. Above are the unmanifest spheres, those of the Self-born (svayambhu) and the Supreme-Ruler (paramesthin). Below are the manifest spheres, those of the moon and the earth. The sun represents the limit, the point, where the manifest and the unmanifest worlds unite" (Daniélou, 92).

Earth. "The first sphere is the earth, the support of all creatures, the ‘nourisher’ of all physical life. The earth is also represented as a goddess, or as a cow that feeds everyone with her milk. She is the mother of life, the substance of all things. Prthu, the ‘first king’ and inventor of agriculture, forced the reluctant earth to yield her treasures and feed men, hence she is called Prthivi, the ‘domain of Prthu.’ . . . . All the forms of the earth and of life on it are forms, the children, of this goddess, Earth. Mountains, trees, rivers, animals, have in them a common yet multiple life and are guided by conscious beings who are the attendants of the earth goddess” (Daniélou, 87).

Sky. The sky (Dyaus), the supreme firmament, is one of the oldest deities of the Indo-Europeans. The Sky is the Father and, with the Earth, the origin of everything. All the gods, Sun, Moon, Wind, Rain, Lightning, Dawn, and the rest, are children of the Sky. Dyaus covers the Earth and fertilizes her with his seed, that is, with rain” (Daniélou, 92).

Wind. "Between the earth and sky, abode of the sun, is the intermediary sphere or sphere of space, the dwelling place of subtle beings whose king is the lord of wind, Vayu. Just as fire, the devourer, was the mouth of the gods, wind is their breath. In the Upanisads, Vayu appears as the cosmic life breath. The Mahabharata calls him the life breath of the world, the universal ‘spirit,’ the impeller of life and of the living. Vayu also the substance and the essence of speech (vāc). A few Vedic hymns are addressed to him. . . . Vayu is the purifier, the first to have drunk the ambrosia, the soma” (Daniélou, 90-91).

The Moon, the Cup-of-Offerings. Soma was a drug, a medicine, producing powerful states of ecstasy and states of wildly expanded consciousness. There are a number of theories about what the source plant was; some contend the source plant became extinct, others suggest the source plant was a variety of mushroom that produces a compound similar to psilocybin. "In the later hymns of the Rg Veda, as well as in the Atharva Veda and in the Brahmanas, the Offering (Soma) is identified with the moon and with the god of the moon. Soma is the most frequently occurring name for the moon in the Mahabharata. The moon is the vessel of divine ambrosia drunk by Ancestors and gods yet ever refilled again” (Daniélou, 98).
In the Rg Veda the Dawn (Usas) is shown as a young woman who uncovers her breast for men to admire. Always young, she pushes back the darkness and awakens all beings. She moves about in a splendid chariot. She is the sister of Night, the wife or mistress of the Sun, the daughter of the Sky. According to the Brahmanas, she has incestuous relations with her father, the lord-of-progeny (Prajapati)” (Daniélou, 97).

The name Rudra, which can be translated as the ‘howler’ or the ‘red one,’ is also said to mean the ‘cause of tears.’” (Daniélou, 102). A dark, fierce, stormy tempered god, almost the opposite of Usas. Like Indra, Rudra is associated with the storm clouds that brought the life-giving monsoon rains. Thought to be a Dravidian god of very ancient origin. Rudra represented the unconquered and unpredictable character of raw nature. Rudra will later be connected with Shiva, one of the three main gods of the Hindu pantheon.

Varuna presides over the relationship of man with the gods. He is the ruler of the ‘other side,’ of the invisible world. The sudden favor of the gods and the elements, their unaccountable cruelty, cannot be understood. The behavior of Varuna, who rules over the invisible, cannot be foreseen; hence he appears a dangerous lord, a despot. ‘He is the owner of the magic-power (maya)” (Rg Veda) through which forms are created. He represents the inner reality of things, higher truth (rta), and order in their transcendent aspects, beyond the understanding of man. His absolute power is felt during the night and in all that is mysterious, while man-made laws, represented by Mitra, rule the day” (Daniélou, 118).

Friendship. “Among the sovereign principles of ‘this’ world, the first is human solidarity, the respect for laws and treaties, the sacredness given to all that links man to man. Friendship (Mitra) appears to have been the most important of the divinized virtues of the early Aryans, although, at the time of the Rg Veda, its role had already plaid before the expectation of divine grace represented as Varuna. Only one hymn of the Rg Veda is addressed to Mitra. . . . The comradeship of men and the favor of gods, Mitra and Varuna, are the complements of each other. The clear rules of human association and the mysterious laws of fate govern ‘this’ known world and ‘that’ unknown world, symbolized as the day and the night, between which man’s life is divided” (Daniélou, 115-116).

In Vedic mythology the Pervader is considered an Āditya [sovereign principle] and represents the perception of the cosmic law that pervades the three worlds. This law is revealed to man through the illumination called knowledge and is compared to the light of the sun striding in three steps across the seven regions of the universe. . . . In the Vedas, Visnu is occasionally associated with Indra. Knowledge associates with Power. The priestly Visnu helps the Sovereign, Indra, the embodiment of the Law, to kill the demon Vrtra. With Indra he drinks the ambrosia. . . . In the Rg Veda, Visnu does not appear in the first rank of gods. He does not have all the characteristics of the Visnu of later times but he is already the unconquerable preserver” (Daniélou, 126).

Death. “Yama is the god of death, the sovereign of the infernal regions. Sinister and fearful, he judges the dead whom his messengers drag before his throne. He is the embodiment of righteousness (dhārma) and the king-of-justice (dharmaraja). . . . In the Vedas, Yama is the First Ancestor and the king-of-Ancestors. He rules over the kingdom of the dead where the Ancestors dwell. He is the king-of-ghosts. He has the full rank of a god, for soma is pressed for him” (Daniélou, 132).
